Celebrating the 40th Anniversary of the Pat Crowley House

Fostering joy, warmth, and intergenerational connection for low-income seniors in Chicago since 1982

Pat Crowley House

to create and nourish a true living community of elderly people who care for and about each other.

In 1983, a year after its founding, H.O.M.E. bought 1537 W. Rosemont in the Edgewater neighborhood from the Archdiocese of Chicago and transformed it into “a shared intergenerational, interracial living arrangement for the elderly.”

Named for Pat Crowley, the noted Chicago Catholic layman, lawyer and philanthropist, the property thrives as intergenerational shared living, where 12 low-income seniors live in a family-like setting – shared meals, common areas, and activities – with 4 younger Resident Assistants (rent free), and a family with children.

H.O.M.E.'s underlying philosophy is that older adults flourish when they are treated with great respect.

H.O.M.E.'S Award-winning Intergenerational Housing: Good Life Senior Residences

On May 4, 2023, H.O.M.E. is hosting a fundraising event to celebrate and raise money for the 40-year anniversary of the Good Life Senior Residences program and its roots at Pat Crowley House.

Good Life Senior Residences offer private rooms, two meals per day, outings, services, and on-site health check-ups and tutorials through H.O.M.E.'s community partners – all for low-income older people.

It's a wonderful option for independent seniors who relish a family-like living environment. Resident Assistants, typically young adults, live on-site and assist residents with housekeeping and laundry, and share creative and social activities. Some of the best reasons to choose Good Life Senior Residences include:

- Living expenses covered by one, all-inclusive price.
- Social engagement in an intergenerational, family-like setting.
- Living independently in a community, with support from staff and other residents, can make a positive difference on your quality of life and could lead to a more preventative approach to overall wellness and to better health outcomes.

Privacy when you want it and assistance when you need it.
